

Superintendent Highlight of the Week
January 17, 2014

I know you will find this amazing but our Kindergarten students are expected to be graduated from college in the year 2030. So I was pondering about the kinds of skills they will need along the way to make them ready and equipped to successfully enter that world. Will the internet be as obsolete as our vinyl records by then? How will communication change in their world? I thought it was time for me to drop in and see how they were doing and was I pleased!!!

This month all Kindergarten classes have engaged in activities that integrate the concept of citizenship and peace with learning about the life of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

They have all read the "Peace Book" by Todd Parr to illustrate examples of being at peace and during class discussions, Dr. King was highlighted as a person who promoted peace. Each class worked on a project to express their idea of peace.

The students in Ms. Gagliano's class worked on a mural that depicted children around the earth forming a peace sign. Watching these children work together I am assured that the future will be in capable hands.

We have come a long way in 50 years. Have a great Martin Luther King Jr. day off.
